Attorney-Client Privilege Compared; Waiver Unlike the Attorney-Client privilege, which belongs only to the Client or the Attorney. While a showing of need may justify discovery of an Attorney's work product, the Attorney-Client privilege cannot be overcome by such a showing. Work product immunity. But since the primary process, and not to protect a Client's confidences, disclosure to a third party does not automatically waive the privilege. Thus, at least in the case of inadvertent waiver, the broad subject matter waiver concept of the Attorney-Client privilege, requiring the whole-sale production of all related privileged material where there has been any waiver at all, is inapplicable in the work product context.
